RPL (RECOGNITION PRIOR LEARNING)

What is RPL?

RPL is where you supply evidence to us on the course that you applied for. If you got the experience in the industry for the course you are doing, from your workplace you can bring in some work samples (eg pictures, documents etc.). This can also be signed of by a third party person that knows that you can do the job. Skills recognition is important and if you understand and competent in the unit that you apply for it is not much use to put you through a training room when you know the material. Also having past qualifications that can be mapped to the course can also make you competent for the unit/s. All RTO’s knows the course code and unit code that you are applying for and this can be done as a credit transfer allowing you not to do the same unit again from a different course. If your not competent in the unit/s that are in the course, there is always gap training to allow you to finish the course. After all the information is gathered and compiled in a portfolio and found competent in all units in the course, you will be issued the qualification that you applied for.
